Kissinger To Stay as Nixon Aide 2 Top Domestic

By Linda Charlton KEY BISCAYNE, Fle. Dec. 3 ONYT). President Nixon an-nounced yesterday that Henry A. Kissinger would continue to serve as his adviser on national security affairs in the second Nixon administration and that a number of other top-level White House staff members also would remain in their present jobs.

Advisers Retained

The announcement ended speculation about Mr. Kissinger's possible return to Harvard Uni-versity, although Ron Ziegler, the White House press secretary, who announced the decisions for the President, gave no indication of whether Mr. Kissinger or any of the others would stay on for the full four years.

John D. Ehrlichman, the assistant to the President for domestic affairs, and H. R. Haldeman, Mr. Nixon's chief of staff, also were listed among those "who will continue in the second term as assistants to the President in the same positions that they currently hold," Mr. Ziegler said.

Satisfaction Indicated

This seemed to confirm Mr. Nixon's satisfaction with the basic structure of the present White House staff and with the performance of both men. The announcement was taken as a particular affirmation of satis-faction with Mr. Haldeman, who had been linked in newspaper reports, vigorously denied by the White House, with the Watergate spying incident.

Richard Helms soon will resign as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, it was reported in Washington. He has been offered a new job by Mr. Nixon and is expected to accept. While no information was available on the new assignment for Mr. Helms, 59, it was determined that he regards the President's new offer as a promotion from his present job. There was specula-tion that Mr. Helms might be replaced by James Schlesinger, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. Ziegler's announcement said that William E. Timmons would continue as assistant to the President for congressional

In addition to the list of White House staff members who will be staying on, Mr. Ziegler announced a shorter list of those who plan to leave. This included Robert J. Brown, a special assistant to the President, the highestranking black on the White House staff, and Harry S. Dent, a special counsel to the President.

Mr. Nixon "reluctantly accepted" Mr. Dent's resignation, Mr. Ziegler said, and accepted Mr. Brown's resignation "with special regret." He said that both men (Continued on Page 2, Col. 2)

By Terence Smith JERUSALEM, Dec. 3 (NYT),-

Foreign Minister Abba Eban said in an interview yesterday that Jordan could gain a "great deal" in negotiations with Israel, including "peace, population, teritory and a special status for the Moslem places of Jerusalem." He declined to say whether Israel would permit a Jordanian flag to fly over the Moslem holy places—a major point of contention in any peace settlement-but would be a subject for negotiation.

"Israel does not claim exclusive furisdiction or unilateral respon-sibility over the holy places of Islam," Mr. Eban said in his "This does not mean any divi-

The official result of a nationwide referendum was 1,345,057 for and 509,350 against the treaty that will eventually grant Swiss industrial products duty-free access to a consumer market of 300 million who already take half of Switzerland's exports.

The turnout was 51.3 percent, relatively high by Swiss standards. Economics Minister Ernst Brugger hailed the result as overwhelming support for cooperation with the KEC. He noted that Switzerland was the only one among the community's free-trade partners to submit the treaty to a popular referendum. The treaty obtained majorities in all 25 centons with the margin

King's Statement ... --The king's most recent comment to this effect was in an interview with Eric Rouleau of Le Monde, published on Nov. 4, in which he said: "If a just settlement could be reached, we would be ready to conclude a total peace I with Israell with all the implications attached to such an agreement."

The king's definition of a "just settlement" has always included a return of all Israeli-occupied Jordanian territory and a restoration of the "principle" of Jordanian sovereignty in East Jeru-While Israel would never return to the 1967 armistice lines, Mr. Eban said, Jordan would discover in negotiation that Israel was prepared to compromise. "The king must realize by now that the slogan of 'not an inch' is not Israeli government policy," he said. "Although he would not emerge from negotiations with everything he seeks, he would come out with a very great deal more than be has now."

Mr. Eban added that, while Israel had always thought it "logical" to conclude a peace agreement with Egypt first, it would "not refuse" to do so with Jordan first if an acceptable agreement could be reached

He seemed skeptical, however, that King Hussein's regime had what he called "the strength and stability of policy necessary" to reach a compromise settlement. Beal Value

"There is real value in the ideological movement implied in the king's recent statements about making peace and the renunciation of war," Mr. Eban said. "But we still have to transfer that into operative results." Mr. Eben also said Egypt would be unwise to attempt a limited show of force along the Suez Canal because "controlled hostilities have a way of getting out of control." Israel, he said, would counter with a response that would make even a limited Egyptian attack "very unre-warding."

that Egyptian President Anwar Sedat does not have the capacity to defeat her country in war nor the courage to tell his people that Israel is in the Middle East to stay, according to an interview published today in Time magazine, She also declared: "Sadat expects things to be solved for him by others. Thieu's Attitude

What President Nguyen Van Thieu's attitude will be toward the final draft, which is not expected to take his objections into account to any major extent, is not known.

His major objection, reiterated yesterday on Saigon radio, is to a settlement that does not formally require the withdrawal of all North Vietnamese troops from South Vietnam.

According to the Saigon sources, the agreement will not specify that. But, informally, the American-North Vietnamesc understanding is that Hanot will regroup its forces and withdraw substantial numbers of them over a six-to-eight-month period. (In an interview with an Ita-lian journalist, Saigon's Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam said South Vietnam would only sign a peace agreement when Hand agreed to withdraw its troops from the South, Reuters reported.

According to Radio Saigon, he added that be did not believe the United States would sign a peace accord without South Vietnam's concurrence.] Similar reports of an imminent final agreement have circulated before in Salgon, but have turned out to be premature. The South Victnamese sources say that it is possible things could be delayed again, but gave this account of some of the events at the last series of Kissinger-Tho meetings in Paris from Nov. 20

On Nov. 20, Mr. Kissinger met with Mr. Tho and outlined Saigon's objection to the acbord: that the provision for a "National Council of Reconcilia-tion and Concord" left open the possibility that its powers would extend into the villages and hamlets as a quasi-governmental body, that there was no provision for a North Vietnamese troop withdrawal and that the 1954 Demilitarized Zone between North and South Vietnam should be formally restored. On Nov. 21, the two men met again, and this time Mr. Tho presented a list of demands by the Viet Cong—the National Liberation Front and the Provisional Revolutionary Government. The demands were that Mr.

North Vietnamese Polithuro, would initial the agreement this veck and that the two governments would sign it formally, perhaps a week later, by about Dec. 15. ### Spanish Charter-Jet Crash Kills 155 in Canary Islands

Canary Islands, Dec. 3 (UPI).— A chartered Spanish airliner returning West German tourists from an Atlantic cruise today exploded on takeoff here, ""ng all 155 persons aboard in one of the worst disasters in civil aviation history.

A spokesman for the Span*ux air charter company said the plane carried a crew of seven and 148 passengers, most of them Germans, All were killed instantly except for a badly burned woman, who was dragged alive from the flaming wreckage, but died afterward, he said.

The German Consulate bere said all the passengers were German except for three Austrians and two Italians. The crew included six Spaniards and a German stewardess. An airline epokesman said 75 of the passengers were women. There were no children on the flight.

The privately owned company -run by a father and his two sons, all pilots—said the causes of the crash were "yet unknown."

Brezhnev Supports Hungary Lynch's Law On 5-Year Economic Reform To Quell IRA

The Soviet Union yesterday firmly supported Hungary's economic eform policy, a recent target of criticism by orthodox Communists in Eastern Europe.

Moscow's reassurances for the five-year-old program of Hunga-rian conomic incentives were contained in a communique issued here and in Moseow after a fiveday visit by Leonid I Brezhnev, the Soviel party leader.

The document said Mr. Brezhnev and Janos Kadar, the Hungarian Communist leader, share "an entire identity of views on all matters."

The 3.009-word statement said Mr. Brezhnev had discussed social political and economic matters with Mr. Kadai and praised Hungarian progress.

Western Incentives

Hungary's reform program uses market regulators, profit sharing, managerial initiatives and other economic factors ecommon in the West, although the Hungarian economy remains essentially centrally controlled.

It had been questioned earlier this year in Prayda and criticized more recently by conservative Communist officials in Czechoslovakia and East Germany. Some critics warned that Hungary's experiments threatened the unity of the Communist year and appoint his own man in Peking, which Mr. Whitlam visited

Another move expected early in the new year is an attempt by Mr. Whitlam to assume leadership in the South Pacific by taking the cuestion of French nuclear tests to the International Court of Justice. A third new policy will be the refusal of visas to racially selected sporting teams, specifically South Africans.

Foreign Capital Curbs There is likely to be no change in attitude toward foreign investment but overseas firms seeking to buy a controlling interest in Australian companies are likely to find their way obstructed. Steps will be taken to enable Australia to build its own ships, pipelines, rolling stock and light and fighter aircraft rather than purchase them from the United States and Western Europe. There will be little change in Australia's defense posture under Labor. Labor estimates of defense spending are little below those of the outgoing government. Conscription will end but the new government hopes to build up the strength and morale of the regular army with better pay and conditions. Much should not be made of supposed differences between Mr. Whitlam and Mr. McMahon over Australia's military role in Southeast Asia.

What, then, of the Liberals, whose coalition had 66 seats in the old House to 59 for Labor? In the wake of yesterday's humiliating defeat, the Liberals will have to regroup and this process is likely to lead to the same kind of feuding that tore the Labor party apart for so long. The bloodletting began even before Mr. McMahon-prime minister for 20 months-conceded defeat. His predecessor as prime minister. lished a cabinet committee to coordinate ministerial actions.

Show of Sopport The visit by Mr. Brezhnev was seen as an indication of support for the corrected program and for Mr. Kadar's policies in general. Yesterday's communique confirms that view as well as offering indirect support for other East-bloc leaders seeking to introduce economic reform.

The Soviet leader seemed to indicate in the communique and in statements during his visit here that he might recommend adaptation of some Hungarian techniques for his own economy, which is undergoing reform.

The Soviet and Hungarian leaders agreed to increase cultural exchanges and expand cooperation in research and the social sciences. Mr. Brezhnev praised Hungary's "political maturity and labor dynamics."

The communique called for settlement of the question of the 1939 Munich pact, the final obstacle to normalization of West German-Czechoslovak relations. A Hungarian treaty with Bonn awaits settlement of the Prague-Bonn dispute.

The Czechoslovaks hava been insisting that West Germany re-nounce the Munich pact "from the beginning," but Bonn has refused, saying this would create legal complications.

The communique did not refer to this Czechoslovak demand, prompting speculation that it had been dropped.

European Arms Cut

Mr. Brezhnev and Mr. Kadar spoke of the "great importance of a further cut in armed forces and armament on the European continent," which they said could represent a major step "toward clearing the European political atmosphere "

They lashed out against the Chinese Communists, emphasiz-ing what they termed "the danger inherent in Maoism, especially in today's political line of guidance pursued by China's leaders." Peking was accused of seeking to split the Communist movement

The new law empowers special courts to convict defendants as IRA members simply on the testimony of a senior police, officer. It lays down penalties of up to three years in jail and fines of $1.000 for membership in the illegal organization.

By drastically widening the rules on evidence, the new law is expected to make possible the conviction of many IRA suspects who have gone free in the past or whom police never brought court because proof of their IRA membership was insufficient under previous laws.

Simon Pays Over $3 Million For a Madonna by Raphael

The Raphael, done on a wooden panel approximately 21 inches by 24 inches, depicts a stately Madonna in a rich green cape and deep red dress, holding the Christ child on a brocaded cushion with her right hand. In her left, she holds an open book as she casts a gentle glance at her son. Both figures are imbued with a tender serenity, echoing the poetle mood of a soft hluegreen landscape dotted with feathery trees. A chateau stands in the left background.

Although there is some controversy over the picture's date. most authorities believe it was painted in 1504, when Raphael was 21. An early but accomplished work, the painting still reveals some etylistic influence of the artist's teacher. Perugino.

No Assistance Needed According to Mr. Hartt, a professor of art history at the University of Virginia, the panel was completely painted by Raphael, without the aid of workshop assistants. He also noted that it was "unusual for a painting that is nearly 500 years old to be in such excellent condition." He said that the painting, moreover, bears no traces of "touch-ups" or "in-painting." Despite the absence of a signature on the work, most authorities have supported their Simon's private collection.

arguments for its authenticity on stylistic evidence and on four drawings in England and France that seem to be preparatory studies for the painting.

It is not known what happened to the picture from the 16th century to the 19th century. Bernard Berenson, the great authority on Italian art, once called it a "homeless painting." He knew of its existence but not its whereshouts.

In the 1850s it is said to have been in the collection of an Englishman, Thomas Townend. It remained in his family and on the walls of his family and on until 1950, when Wildenstein purchased it.

Born in Urbino

Raphael, who was born in 1483 in Urbino, painted the picture while in Florence. In 1508 he moved to Rome, where he worked on his famous Vatican frescos for the next 12 years. He died in Rome in 1520.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Dec. 3 (NYT).-The first systematic effort to protect major features of the world's cultural and natural heritage is heing planned by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organ-

A treaty adopted by UNESCO's General Conference, awaiting signature by the member nations, will continue the agency's work in this area by establishing a world beritage committee and fund to provide financial and technical aid. Endangered monuments, architectural works, archaeological sites, geological formations and enimal and plant habitats would benefit.

Officials of UNESCO described the committee as "a sort of international Red Cross" to help preserve property and natural life of "universal value."

Loans Are Included Emergency and long-term assistance by the committee, starting perhaps by 1974, will include iow-interest or interest-free ioans, provision of experts, skilled labor and equipment, technical studies, training of epecialists and, in exceptional cases, subsidies. UNESCO officials said it was too early to estimate the size of the committee's fund or identify specific projects that might he undertaken. Nations acceding to the treaty will be required to contribute to the fund and voluntary donations are expected from countries, UN agencies and other private or public sources. Millions of dollars already have been spent by UNESCO, private organizations and individuals and some governments to safeguard Egyptian temples and monuments on Philae Island, the Bronze Age town of Mohenjo-Daro in Pakistan, the Carthege-Tunis area in Tunisia, ancient Nepalese cities. an Andean road in Peru, fauna in the Galapagos Islands, African wildlife and the whole of Venice. But increasing demands for large-scale international aid had to press for the treaty, which was

An Egyptian Marxist, Lutiy el-Kholy, representing the Arab Socialist Union, Egypt's sole political party, played a leading role in organizing the conference and in the discussions.

UN Resolution Opposed

Commando delegations, especially such Marxist groups as the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Popular Democratic Front, insisted that the conference must reject ootright the United Nations Security Council resolution of Nov. 22, 1967, calling for a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli con-

Arab Communists objected to that position, and their spokes-men called for moderation. Karlm Morowa, a member of the Polit-buro of the Lebanese Communist party, declared, "I wish we would learn from experience of the past five years" since the 1967 war. ROME. Dec. 3 (AP).—Strikes that caused confusion recently at Italy's airports may be ended by a new two-year contract that was approved Priday by the airports' management and ground crew

For 8 Months Without Trial

West Germany Holds Scientist

HEIDELBERG, West Germany, Dec. 3 (NYT). - Prof. Heinz August Fithutb, a West German nnclear physicist suspected of misappropriating unlversity funds, has entered his ninth month of pretrial detention with scant hope of an early start of

The case, which has aroused international interest, illustrates what critics have called a medieval aspect of West German law —the inordinate length of pretrial imprisonment.

The Fithuth case made headlines in March, when the 47-yearold scientist was arrested on suspicion of embezzling several hundred thousand marks and suspended from his post as direc-tor of Heidelberg University's Institute of High Energy Physics. Prof. Fithuth came to the institute from CERN, the European nuclear research center at Geneva, in 1964.

According to the public prosecutor, the length of Prof. Fithuth's pretrial detention is mainly due to the "time-consum-ing" task of tracing the professor's financial transactions.

The mass of allegedly incrimi-nating evidence allows two difconclusions about Prof. Fitbuth.

At best, he might be an unworldly man who became hopelessly entangled in a financial mess of his own making. This theory is supported by a self-confessed "mistake" of mixing his personal finances with those of the institute. At worst, be might be a money-hungry person trying to carrich himself in the clumstest fashion imaginable

Tbe Heidelberg prosecutor. Riddiger Rapp, who estimates that the professor transferred "considerably" more than half a million marks, which is about $160,000, to personal accounts in Switzerland and Britain, said in an Interview that the evidence found so far did not bear out the professor's line of defense that he bad merely attempted to better the institute's financial position through speculative use of university funds under his own

Both Mr. Rapp and Otto Lachenauer, the professor's defense counsel, said the authorities had obtained the return of sbout $189,000 to the university. However, the prosecutor does not seem to share Mr. Lachenauer's opinion that there are no more institute funds to be discovered in numered accounts in Switzerland.

This and the drastic 10-year prison sentence that Prof. Fithuth faces are the reasons the Heidelberg prosecutor has so far refused to allow him freedom on bail. There is "ample reason" to fear that Prof. Fithuth might try to flee the country, the prosecutor

The Heidelberg prosecutor sald that Prof. Fithnth had an "extravagant" style of living, having apartments in Reidelberg and Geneva, where he retained an advisory role for CERN, and three cars, including a Mercedes and a Citroën, Prof. Fithuth made trips to Geneva, where he maintained ao apartment and an office. His wife, Ingeborg, is a doctor in a Geneva haspital. Their two sons, aged 18 and 20, are studying in Switzerland.

Prof. Fithuth's trial will start "some time in the next year."

First Detailed Map of Mars, Based on Mariner-9 Photo

The first detailed map of another planet shows the entire globe of Mars on a flat surface. Scale at the equator is one inch to about 400 miles. The names of prominent Martian features were superimposed on the map and though widely used are not official.

Project Called Milestone In Exploration of Space

By John Noble Wilford

NEW YORK (NYT) -The first 1969-had flown by the planet detailed map of the entire and quickly photographed oneglobe of another planet has been completed by cartographers working with a mount of photographs of Mars taken by the Mariner-9

Since a good map is an important step in discovery, a perspective of what is known and what may be worth knowing, the topographic map of Mars is considered a milestone in the ex-ploration of the solar system.

The map, which was made available to The New York Times, shows the neighboring planet in all its newly discovered varietythe deep grooves radiating from white polar caps, the great expanses of wind-blown plains, the vast equatorial chasm, the cratered lands, the faults. cracks, meandering channels and towering volcanic peaks.

The United States Geological Survey's Center of Astrogeology in Flagstaff, Ariz., produced the map from photographs processed by the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif. The laboratory, operated by the California Institute of Technology for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration directed the Moriner-9 mission, The man shows the entire Martian surface in a Mercator projection at a scale of one to 25 million at the equator, an inch equaling about 400 miles, and in two special polar projections. Other maps are being pre-Dared for an even more detailed study of the planet.

Although described as preliminary, the map is a graphic illustration of how far man's knowledge of Mars has advanced since Galileo first studied the planet through his crude telescope, since Giovanni Schiaparelli "discovered" threadlike canals on Mars in 1877, and since Percival Lowell affirmed at the turn of the century that the presumed canals were the work of "intelligent creatures, alike us in spirit, though not in form.

Until Mariner reached Mars a year ago, man's view of that planet remained unclear. At its closest approach Mars is about 35 million miles away, and with the best telescopes it is possible to see little more of its surface than one can sec of the moon with the unaided eye.

Previous maps, drawn from these carth-based instruments, represented more a vision of Mars than the reality of Mars. These maps were a shadowy blur of light and dark revealing only the broad variations in the planet's albedo, the light reflectivity of its surface. They showed few surface features, and many of them, like Lowell's canals, tended to exist only in the eye of the beholder.

Then, for nearly a year after t went into an orbit of Mars. Mariner-9 a windmill-shaped spacecraft, transmitted more than 7,000 television pictures before its maneuvering rockets ran out of gas last month.

Earlier Mariners-Mariner-4 in 1965 and Mariners-6 and 7 in tenth of its surface from several thousand miles away. Mariner-9, the first receraft to orbit an-other planet, obtained 100 percent coverage, and many of the mapping pictures were taken from as close as 1,025 miles.

About 1,500 photographs, their clarity and contrast enhanced by computer processing, were carefully pieced together like a jigsaw puzzle. This was done within a framework of latitude and longitude lines, each picture's position being plotted from Mariner-9 tracking data.

As the finishing touches were being put on the map, Harold Masursky, director of the Center of Astrogeology, sat in his Flagstaff office recently and spoke of the achievement across a table cluttered with the tools of the extraterrestrial manmaker's craft -pictures of Mars, computer print-outs and coffee mugs.

Likened to West Surveys

"We've done the same thing for Mars as the old guys of the Sur-vey did for the American West," said Mr. Masursky, 49, a geologist whose mapping experience goes back to the Burma Road in World War II and to pack trips in the mountains of Montana. Mr. Mazursky said that the new map would be used as the "base sheet" for geological and meteorological maps and for scientists to plot their observations of the apparent seasonal changes on The map, in addition, will be the indispensable guide for the selection of landing sites for the two unmanned Viking spacecraft in the summer of 1976. These missions are designed to explore the nature of the planet's chemistry and search for signs of biological activity, including any forms of Mapping a place where men have yet to set foot represented a considerable step beyond the plane table and steel tape of ordinary surveying or even the aerial photogrammetry of modern earth mapping Mariner-9 was the robot surveying party, equipped with a television camera and remote-sensing devices for determining elevations and distances.

As sometimes happens to more mundane surveyors, Mariner-9 had to wait out a dust storm before the mapping could begin. Not only did it outlast the storm. which raged over the planet when the spacecraft went into orbit in November, 1971, but the durable Mariner-9 also surpassed its objective of 70 percent mapping coverage by operating far beyond its three-month life expectancy. When the dust settled on Mars last Christmas, Mariner-9 began three 19-day mapping sequences working from the south pole upward. The spacecraft circled the planet twice a day, its orbit crossing the equator at a 65-degree angle. Because of the planet's rotation, the spacecraft was able to photograph a different swath on each orbit without changing

The few gaps in the coverage were filled in later on special commands from flight controllers at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory. This was particularly true for the north polar can where the winter hazes did not dissipate until near the end of the mission.

Difficult Planet to Film

Mariner-9's television pictures, were often raw indeed. Mars is difficult to photograph. The light contrasts are very low. The surface is subdued and, unlike the airless moon, sometimes is masked by a light haze and dust swirls-

To make matters worse, the pictures lacked uniform perspective. Not ail of them were taken at the same altitude or same angle. Often, as a result, round craters appeared oval.

And there were other distortions introduced by the Vidicon camera system itself. Devices of this type are unable to reproduce exactly the geometry—the precise relative nosition and shape-of a scene that covers a broad area. For example, if Mariner-9 and photographed a grid of streets on earth the streets would appear curved. a barrel-shaped distortion not unlike that produced by fish-eye lenses used by professional photographers.

"If you simply gived 1,500 pictures together, you'd be absolutely dead, you'd have nothing." Mr. Masuraky said. "We bad to learn how to handle incredibly lousy material."

This was where the computers at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory entered the map-making process. The Mars pictures arrived at the laboratory, by way of the Mojave Desert, as so much digital data radioed from the spacecraft and recorded on magnetic tape. Each black-and-white picture was composed of 700 sean lines. with 822 points (pixels, or picture elements) on each line. And each pixel was electronically coded on a scale of gray from 0 to 511, the darker the photographed fea-ture the lower the number.

As Dr. James A Cutts, 29, a physicist on the Mariner photo-interpretation team, put it, the computer "plays games with these to transform washedout and distorted pictures into clear scenes of the Martian sur-This involved four major

First, to eliminate the barrelshaped geometric distortions, the ment computer was programed with algebraic formulas to "stretch" the pictures.

Juggling Entailed

The formulas described the known distorting factor in the Vidicon system and enabled the computer, through a series of calculations, to predict where a particular pixel should really be in the picture. All the pixels in picture were thus juggled.

Additional guides to the computer were the reseau marks, a series of black dots super-imposed on each picture. The dots represent a pattern of tiny metallic squares fixed at known points on the surface of the Vidicon tube. The reseau marks give the machine a frame of reference in stretching and squeezing the many pixels into the positions that were truer to reality.

Next, the computer dealt with the generally poor contrast of the raw pictures. If, for example, all the pixels in a picture ranged in grays between 230 and 270, there standard Mercator projection for would be only subtle differences in the shadings. Surface features would be almost indistinguishable, and this was not uncommon. To overcome the problem the computer used a mathematical formula by which 220-or whatever the lowest gray reading was became 0, or total black, and 270 became 511, or total white. By changing the gray scale, it was possible to get more discernible shades of gray in between.

In this way, the photo inter-preters could draw the walls of craters out of vague shadows and distinguish cliffs and ridges out of dark streaks Without computer enhancement, Dr. Cutts remarked, "We could have had Lowell all over again, with canals." The third step in the process was an adjustment of the pictures so that, though taken at different angles, they would have a common perspective. The computer's calculations took into account the position of the reseau marks and Mariner-9's angle at which each picture was The ideal would be to have each picture taken from directly overbead. But the computer was able to reconstruct the perspective of pictures taken from angles as much as 70 degrees off the tracking data, which gave the vertical. Finally, since the Mars map had to be a flat representation of a rounded object, the pictures underwent another processing step to stretch the features to a certain projection. For this, the computer was programed with formulas describing the projection and what had to be done to each picture.

Before the mission the mapmakers had decided to use the the planet's broad equatorial band, running from 65 degrees south latitude up to 65 degrees north. A stereographic projection was selected to show the polar regions as they would look from directly overhead. "We couldn't use any one projection over too great a range of latitudes." Dr. Cutts explain-"You get such distortions in the size and shape of things that it's no longer meaningful. You can see it on Mercator projecalways looks as if it is as big as Africa, when in fact it's one-

It took about 20 minutes for the computer to run through the many mathematical formulas to enhance the clarity of a single photograph. Some pictures were processed time and again before they met cartographic standards. During much of the mission the laboratory was receiving 60 pictures a day from the space-enth the size."

Negatives Made

Magnetic-taped versions of the enhanced photographs, corrected to uniform height and vertical angle, were then shipped by air freight to Mr. Masursky's team at Flagstaff. A machine there converted the taped data into negatives of the photographs. These were developed and enlarged for the use of the photomosaic team.

Following a "footprint plot" made from Mariner-9 tracking data, the mosaic team knew where each picture belonged. After the entire mosaic was assembled and photographed, artists had some touching up to because, as Raymond M. Batson, technical director of the map project, said, the originals

SOUTH POLAR REGION

While the map was still in preparation, scientists identified four major geological provinces on Mars—the volcanic regions, canyon lands, expanses of bleak moonlike craters and stair-step terraces near the poles. One of the outstanding features on Mars, and on the map, is Nix Olympica, which was discovered by Mariner-9 to be a volcanic mountain. At its base, the volcano is 300 miles wide. It rises 10 1/2 miles and is capped with a 40-mile-wide crater. Mount Everest is 5 1/2 miles Southeast of Nix Olympica are three somewhat smaller volcanoes. To the east, just south of the equator, stretches a canyon unlike any on earth-with the possible exception of the rift valleys of East Africa. It runs some 2,500 miles, 10 times the length of Grand Canyon of Arizona and nearly one-fourth the circumference of the Martian globe, Mariner's ultraviolet instruments measured the chasm depth at nearly 20,000 feet. The Grand Canyon's deepest part is about 5,500 feet deep.

The largest basin on Mars is Hellas, circular flatlands south of the equator that extend from 310 degrees east to 260 degrees east. Surrounding Hellas is a densely cratered region believed to be the oldest surface feature, the result of ancient impacts by meteorites.

At both polar regions, the map shows some traces of the apparently sedimentary terraces that scientists; believe may deposits of dust and volcanic as Some of the layers are more th

All the same, two of his announcements seemed to forecast continued centralization authority and less, rather than more, latitude for most secondterm cabinet officers. Mr. Nixon said the White House Office of Management and Budget would take on "a new, expanded role" and he instructed its new director, Roy L. #### Shultz to Moonlight

On Friday, the President disclosed that while George P. Shultz would stay on as secretary of the Treasury, he would moonlight-with a second title and a White House staff—as a presidential assistant in charge of a new Council on Economic Policy The new assignment would make nine other cabinetrank officials subordinate to Mr. Shultz on economic matters, international and domestic.

The Shultz announcement raised the question whether Mr. Nixon had in mind the creation of other "super-cabinet" offices as a means of circumventing congressional hesitance to buy his 1971 plan to fold seven existing departments into four new ones. The Council on Economic Policy looked as though it would be similar in scope to the propos-ed Department of Economic

The double role for Mr. Shultz also posed an intriguing question as to how be might fare on Capitol Hill. As a cabinet member, Mr. Shultz is subject to congressional examination on departmental matters but, in his capacity as a White House side, he will be protected from interrogation under the tradition of executive privilege. How might members of Congress or, for that matter, Mr. Shultz know where his accountability begins or ends?

Mr. Nixon chose Peter J. Brennan, president of the Building and Construction Trades Councils in New York City and New York State, one of the earliest and most conservative of the labor leaders who defected from the Democratic party in the presidential campaign.

How much vigor and influence could be generated by members of Mr. Nixon's second-term cabinet remained to be seen. But at least one veteran of the firstterm cabinet sounded like a skeptic in announcing his departure

2 Blasts Pass Anti-IRA Bill

Bombers Shape Events in Dublin

By Desmond Fisher

DUBLIN (IHT).-At 8 p.m. exactly Friday, the first of two 100-pound bombs exploded in the center of Dublin. Twenty minutes later, the second went off. Within an hour the toll was known—two men dead and 127 people injured, four critically.

Seldom in recent Irish history could a major political development be so accurately pinpointed. For in the 90 minutes between the first blast and the confirmation of the casualties, a general election had been averted, a party split papered over, the postponement of a referendum avoided and one of the most con-troversial pieces of legislation ever to go through Dail Eireann (the lower bouse of the Irish parliament) passed in record

The bomb blasts were clearly beard a mile away in Leinster House, seat of the Irish parliament. At the time, deputies were debating the second reading of an anti-IRA bill. One of its most criticized provisions would enable a court to admit as evidence a statement by a senior police officer that an accused was a nember of an unlawful organization. Another provided that references in the media to an accused's alleged membership of such an organization also would be evidence unless he denied them. Critics said the onus of proof was being shifted from the prosecution to the defendant. The bill was being promoted by Desmond O'Mailey, the repub-lic's tough young minister for justice. For the three years of the Northern Ireland crisis, Jack Lynch's government had been accused by the British govern-ment, the Northern Ireland Protestants and the repoblic's main opposition party of being "soft" on the IRA.

But Mr. Lynch and Mr. O'Malley were just waiting their chance. It came this year. The referendum on EEC membership in May and by-election in July gave Mr. Lynch's Flanna Fail (Soldiers of Destiny) party unexpectedly large majorities. By common consent, they were accepted as anti-IRA mandates.

It took five months to draft the new legislation. The opposition Fine Gael (People of Ireland) and Labor parties set out to defeat it, even at the cost of general election. The two rties had been planning for a coalition, realizing it offered the only hope of ousting Fianna Fail, which had been in government for the last 40 years with only two three-year breaks.

Liam Cosgrave, son of the founder of the party from which Fine Gael descends, was forced by threats to his leadership from within to go along with the coalition plans and to oppose the anti-IRA bill. Halfway through the debate, however, he saw the threat of an election following a vote in which his party would find itself on the same side as Labor deputies, some of whom seemed ambivalent in their attitude to the IRA, and with Flanna Fail dissidents whose leader, dismissed as minister after an arms conspiracy trial in 1970, had boasted during the debate of having helped to found and encourage the present-day IRA.

Mr. Cosgrave pulled back. He believed his party would be decimated in an election fought on a straight law-and-order issue. A stern law-and-order man himself, be threatened to vote with the government although only six or seven of his party's 50 Dail deputies sided with him.

Leadership Fight

At this stage of the debate, as Fine Gael was locked in a bitter leadership battle and Mr. Lynch was pressing for a vote which be secretly hoped would precipitate a general election, the bombs went off. Exactly eight day morning, all stages of the anti-IRA bill were passed by tha Dail, the Senate had been summoned to enact it next day and the election scare was over. But Mr. Lynch knew he was on to an electoral winner with tough anti-IRA tactics and an election may not long be postponed. Meanwhile, the referendum will go ahead Thursday to reduce the voting age to 18 and to remove from the Irish constitution two sub-sections that recognize the "special position" of the Roman Catholic Church and list other recognized denominations. Fine Gael survives to continue its long-drawn-out leadership struggle and the plans for a fine Gael-Labor coalition seem still-

Inner Toughness

It had been a dramatic week in Irish politics. On the previous Friday (Nov. 26), the government had fired the governing board of Redio Telefis Eireann, the state-controlled radio and televisiou service, for breaking a ministerial order forbidding it to broadcast material encouraging organiza-tions using violence. An RTE reporter had been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for refusing to reveal his sources. Sean MacSublain, reputed to be the leader of the Provisional IRA. had been jatled for six months and looked like dying in a hungerand-thirst strike. Nightly demon-strations were being held in Dublin. Everyone was on edge.

It was in this climate that Mr. Lynch's government introduced the anti-IRA bill, which opponents criticized as harsher and more undemocratic than any legislation ln a civilized country. Once again, Mr. Lynch, who was elected against his wishes as taoiseach (premicr) in November, 1966, as a compromise between three stronger rivals, had shown

He went on radio and television within three hours of the bomb blests to warn the Irish people of "direct, deliberate and unnistakable" threat to democracy. He held an conergency meeting with his police and army chiefs. Once before, he had warned of a plot agoinst the state. He now seemed to be suggesting the exis-tence of another and more sinister conspiracy. Or perhaps he was preparing for the next stage of the Northern Ireland situation. when British Prime Munisler Edward Heath will announce the British government's decisions about Northern Ireland's future and the Irish on both sides of the border begin to live with the consequences.

No one in Dublin would be surprised if Mr. Lynch were now to order a large-scale round-up of suspected IRA men who might want to sabotage a settlement that they considered unfavorable to Irish unliv. As hundreds of bomb scares are reported and drivers are asked not to come

Back to Paris

As the chief negotiators of the United States and North Vletnam prepare for another round of secret talks in Paris, there are signs that a cease-fire, although not necessarily a durable peace, may at last be "at hand" in Indochina.

It is clear that Saigon is still not happy with the terms of the proposed cease-fire agreement, as presented to a special representative of President Thieu in "frank" talks at the White House last week. Nevertheless, Saigon'e ruler appears to recognize that he is nearing the end of his obstructionist string.

Administration spokesmen have gone so far as to hint at a cut-off in aid to the Thieu regime unless it promptly accepts the eettlement, a long overdoe warning that apparently has not gone unheeded. While continuing to protest, Saigon has significantly retreated on its demand for withdrawal of North Vietnamese troops. It now seems willing to settle for acknowledgment by Hanoi of "the principle of withdrawal." South Vietnamese officials have been alerted to prepare for

For their part, the North Vietnamese reportedly already have bowed to President Thieu's demands for restoration of the Demilitarized Zone at the 17th parallel and for a simultaneous cease-fire in Cambodia and Laos. These concessions, if they have indeed been accepted by both sides, would somewhat improve the highly uncertain prospects for a stable cease-five. Lese reassuring is another reported modification in the peace terms that would permit a virtual free flow of arms to the rival forces, a prospect that would hardly be conducive to an end of bloodletting.

More important guarantore of peace remain for further negotiation. Presidential aide Henry A. Kissinger is expected to seek clarification in Paris of the role of the international supervisory commission. States that have been asked to take on this enormously difficult and delicate job are understandably reluctant to do so without some more precise definition of their rights to observe and report possible cease-fire viola-

Under the best of circumstances, the task of supervising the peace will be impossible without early progress toward a political solution of what has always been essentially a political problem. The peace terms revealed so far are disturbingly vague on how an interim political accommodation is to be achieved. However, there have been some recent encouraging signs from South Vietnam, where both the Saigon government and the National Liberation Front appear to be moving toward more moderate postures. President Thieu is said to be considering a cabinet reshuffle that would broaden his government to include members of the non-Communist opposition more acceptable to the NLF. The Viet Coug and the Provisional Revolutionary Government, in turn, have been emphasizing the names of members who are not known Communists.

These tentative moves on both sides toward a more accommodating center could be strengthened if Saigon would release some or all of the political prisoners it holds. many of whom owe allegiance to neither side in the struggle. The emergence of a strong third force in Vietnamese politics offers the best hope for the long-term settlement that Precident Nixon has been urging.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The first round of negotiations on reform U.S. representatives were right to stress the of the world monetary system, which wound up in Washington last week, has confirmed that the task will be long and hard, not only because of conflicting national interests but also because of the excruciating technical complexities involved.

The first session appears to have reached only one significant conclusion—a negative one. It was that so-called "objective indicators," such as the level and trend of a nation's menetary reserves, should not be used automatically to force a nation to upvalue or devalue its currency.

That result should not necessarily be construed as a defeat for the United States, although this country's chief negotiator, Under Secretary of the Treasury Volcker, did put heavy stress on the necessity for linking obiective indicators to exchange-rate changes as a means of restoring and preserving international equilibrium. However, Security Shultz in his speech to the International Monetary Fund in September had already indicated this country's recognition of the need for a considerable degree of discretionary choice in how nations go about correcting their imbalances of payments.

He soggested that deficit countries might choose either to devalue or to adopt stricter internal financial disciplines. Correspondingly, surplus countries might upvalue or grant more untied foreign aid, reduce their tariffs and other trade barriers, or remove obstacles to an outflow of investment.

At the etart of the week's bargaining, the basic principle of using changes in reserves as an important determinant of necessary national action in some form. Normally, moderate changes in exchange rates would be the best and quickest way of keeping the overall system in balance,

But, while this country continues to push for acceptance of this basic principle, recognition is needed that many technical problems require solution on the precise terms of the adjustment process. There is still great uncertainty among the experts over what should be regarded as a "normal" level of reserves, how to tell temporary from lasting changes in a nation's balance of payments, and how to employ international pressures for adjustment that will not violate a country's desire to keep control of its own economic destiny—especially its level of employment and rate of inflation.

One need go back no further than the months before the Smithsonian Agreement of last December to recall that the United States itself has sometimes fiercely resisted international monetary pressures for an exchange-rate change. The administration has now offered an excellent overall design for world monetary reform. But it may get further sooner if it recognizes realistically the limits that all nations-including this onewould set on their willingness to submit to external coercion or automatic international

Uneasy Pause in Peace Talks

Such North Vietnamese forces as are on South Vietnamese territory at the time of any cease-fire remain the outstanding bone of contention for all three main participants in efforts to end the Vietnam war-Hanoi, Washington and Saigon. To what extent has this now become mainly a matter of presentation? To what extent may it, on the contrary, still be a real issue of substance? All this is very difficult to assess in the present uneasy pause before Henry Kissinger has his next meeting with Le Duc Tho in Paris on Monday. What can be said with some certainty is that the American position on this question must have shifted quite considerably since Dr. Kissinger's extremely optimistic press conference in Washington just over a month ago. On that occasion, it will be recalled, Dr. Kissinger quite clearly implied that the North Vietnamese forces would remain where they were at the time of the cease-fire.

Ireland in Extremis

It has long been the British view that IRA terrorism can never be decisively defeated without the cooperation of the Irish Repoblic's police and security forces. By passing the new anti-IRA legislation, the Dail, its faltering hand strengthened by the highly well-timed bomb explosions in Dublin, has provided the right practical context for this cooperation to become truly effective. In legal terms the new laws are suspect and dangerous. But in security terms, precisely for this reason, they are a policeman's dream... A very small light, at the end of a very long tunnel, is beginning to appear. Both parts of Ireland have approached the abyss, gone nearer to the brink than ever before, and are now, it seems, beginning to recoil.

Shrewd Soviet Diplomacy

By C. L. Sulzberger

DARIS-If one looks back on international developments over the last decade it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that Soviet policy has registered impressive gains. These are now on the road to being punctuated by East-West multilateral conferences of which the Helsinki talks on European security are but the first.

To be sure, since the Cuban confrontation and its blow to Moscow's prestige, there have been other negative developments for the Kremlin. Tension between China and the U.S.S.R. has worsened, causing the Russians to increase their expensive military forces in Asia. Likewise, the last 10 years bave seen the Soviets lose more than they have gained in the Arab world. They suffered vast material losses in the six-day war. Anti-Russian feeling in Libya waxes, And the blow to Russian influence following expulsion of Moscow's large Egyptian garrison was only fractionally compensat-But such defeats have been overbalanced by Brezhney. The Soviet Navy is now the world's second most effective. The Soviet Army is unequalled in a conventional sense. The Soviet nuclear-missile establishment is approximately on a par with America's and this parity is on the way to being ratified in the SALT

Foreign Help

Soviet diplomacy has managed to secure foreign economic help -notably from the U.S.A., Japan and West Europe-to compensate for shortfalls, especially in the case of American grain. And Moscow has consolidated its position as a supercapital. It out-maneuvered Washington in the 1971 Bangladesh war and has attained major influence on the Indian subcontinent. Its position in truculent Hanoi is at least as respected as that of Peking.

Finally, the Kremlin has realized a dream to which all Soviet regimes since Stalin's have aspired: formal acceptance of the political status quo in Europe. This has not been easy. Through-out the Truman, Eisenhower and Kennedy administrations, the idea was vigorously opposed in Wash-

There have indeed been temporary setbacks: the 1956 Polish upheaval and Hungarian uprising; the Czechoslovakian occupation of 1968; the troubles with heretical Yugoslavia and independent-minded Romania, But Yugoslavia is now showing dangerous signs of internal discord and potential crisis when President Tito dies. And Romania is fully aware that its freedom of attitude on foreign matters has rigid limitations. The courtship of Moscow by France, West Germany and America is wholly endorsed in the West but has split political unity in the North Atlantic area. Today there is a distinct underthe-table rivalry for advantages in the Soviet market and a distinct undercurrent of mutual euspicions between Europe and the U.S.A.

Chancellor Brandt's victory in the West German elections, based on an Ostpolitik accepting a divided Germany and the Berlin wall, was widely hailed every-where. Yet it was plainly a gain for Moscow since it formalized Europe's de facto split. For Moscow the moment was, therefore, propitious when preliminary talks on a European security conference opened in Helsinki. The idea of this conference was first bruited by Moscow in 1954 and was pushed (with Soviet prodding) by Poland and then by Finland. In 1966, Moscow souped up the project. In 1969-70, NATO first responded with serious counterproposals. The Helsinki meeting will be followed by exploratory talks in Geneva next month on mutuai and balanced force reductions (MBFR). Formal conferences on each of the twinned subjects will be convened next summer. And the Soviet position has been perceptibly enhanced just as these vital negotiations become inexorable.

Communist rule in East Europe is now implicitly acknowledged by American policy and explicitly confirmed by Bonn, The West has also set out along the road to unilateral arms reduction even before tentative MBFR discussions begin.

The United States has committed itself to depend wholly on volunteer defense forces by July 1, thus clearly requiring reduction in its military dispositions and commitments. And a West German government commission has recommended cutting its standing army-largest in NATO Europe -by 25 percent, to save expenses.

Thus European security is now being negotiated on a basis wholly different from what had been considered vital in the past by both Washington and NATO. It takes off from the platform of de jure acceptance of existing ideological frontiers, even in partitioned Germany. And force reduction talks will start with the two most powerful Western armies already committed to unilateral cuts regardless of what Moscow may concede. The Kremlin is to be congratolated for its patient, shrewd diplomacy.

Ending the War

Nixon's Trump Cards

By James Reston

WASHINGTON-T had the that, long before the Kissing illusion," Henry A. Kissinger said privately before leaving for Paris, "that maybe we could get through these peace negotiations without heartbreak, but that was probably expecting too much. The war has been hearthreaking from the beginning.

The President's chief negotiator seems a little tired now-and no wonder. The smile is still there, but somewhat rusful. Yet he remains confident that he will get through the last hard bargaining phase and come out at last with an agreed cease-fire before too long.

The negotiations have been hard and at times even mysterious. On occasion, both the South and North Vietnamese officials have seemed to prefer vague language-almost meaningless to the Americans—to precise language which defined substantive progress for both sides. So mediate outlook is for more intricate haggling. Le Duc The seems to be having almost as much trouble winning agreement from the Viet Cong as Kissinger is having with Gen. Thieu.

Nevertheless, the logic of events remains on the side of a settle-ment President Nixon has allowed the Paris negotiations to drag along, mainly because he does not want to give the impression that he is imposing an American diktat on Thieu. Nevertheless, it is being made clear to Thieu, with every passing session of the talks, that the President is not prepared to give Saigon a veto over a cease-fire compromise acceptable to the United States, and that, even if he did, the Congress would not vote the economic and military funds to CRITY OH & WAL.

Ultimate Sanction

In the end, this is, and always has been, Washington's ultimate sanction against Salgon. The President is still trying to avoid telling Thieu he is pulling out by a date certain or that he will sign the agreement with Hanoi even if Thieu refuses to do so, but, the longer Thieu holds back, the more determined the President is to come to that decision.

Ironically, Thieu's best hope of prolonging the negotiations and the war lies with Hanol. For if the Hanoi regime insisted that Nixon deliver Thieu's signature before it would release the American prisoners of war, then there would be a real crisis. But it should be noted that Hanoi has never made Thieu's agreement a condition of carrying out the cease-fire agreement between North Vietnam and the Viet Cong on the one side and the United States on the other.

Washington has always under-stood that ideally Saigon would want to see all North Vietnamese troops withdrawn to the North, but it is being emphasized here

The compromise was reached Parls last October, Nixon h made it clear to Thisu that Wa ington was no longer fusisting the withdrawal of all North VI. namese troops.

In other words, Washing recognizes that there is a fund mental difference now between Saigon's peace aims and Wa: ington's peace aims, Thieu na rally wants to keep the Ame cans there until he gets all North Vietnamese out, and lonif possible, but Nixon did promise to fight until all Thieu's objectives were achiev but only until he had a "f chance" to defend South VI

The administration here this the Kissinger-Tho draft agn ment provides that chance. makes provision for a demilirized zone between the North a South, for the neutralization Laos and Cambodia, which we the supply routes for Hanoi, a there is also a demobilizati provision and the promise substantial reconstruction aid both North and South Vietne if the terms of the cease-fire a

It is true, of course, that the terms could be broken, but t point has been made to Thi that if he assumes bad faiand the breaking of the tru terms, then even if all the Nor Vietnamese troops were shipp North, Hanoi could start the w all over again,

Even Gen. Hair, Elssinge: deputy, who assumes little got faith on either side of the wi is said to believe that North Vic nam has more to gain by accep ing the cease-fire than by plo ting to break it, and that eve if it did, North Vietnam would have great difficulty in mountir a major successful offensive wit the troops and supplies at 1 command against the much large forces at Thieu's disposal.

The talk here now is of cor tinuing roughly $700 million year of aid to Salgon and of five-year, $2.5-billion reconstruc tion program for North Vietnan Getting this amount of mone out of the new Congress eve after a cease-fire will not t easy, but, without a cease-first would be impossible.

Letters

Vietnam Record I have no wish to argue with

Frank Riesenberger about a topic as subjective as the mandate that President Nixon did or did not receive from the voters (Letters Nov. 29), but would like to point out that his defense of U.S. foreign policy is based on what could be most politely termed a misunderstanding of the truth. He says, for example, that President Kennedy "was backed by the American people and their representatives in Congress, not only for the well-expressed determination (to assure the survival and success of liberty) but also when he acted by sending our first active fighting men to Southeast Asia."

This statement, so assured and factual, will come as news to anyone who has read the official Defense Department study of the U.S. tovolvement in Vietnam --"The Pentagon Papers." marising the study, The New York Times reported that "Ac-cording to the study... the Kennedy tactics deepened the American involvement in Vietnam piecemeal, with each step minimizing public recognition that the American role was growing. President Kennedy made his first fresh commitments to Vietnam secretly. The Pentagon study discloses that in the spring of 1961 the President ordered 400 Special Forces troops and 100 other American military advisers sent to South Vietnam. No publicity was given to either move." The Defense Department study itself explains this secrecy by noting that "If it were done openly, [it] would be the first formal breach of the Geneva agreement."

The Times then notes: "On May 11, 1961, the day on which President Kennedy decided to send the Special Forces, he also ordered the start of a campaign of clandestine warfare against North Vietnam, to be conducted by South Vietnamese agents directed and trained by the Central Intelligence Agency and some American Special Forces troops." Discussing the Special Forces, the Defense Department study says: "The President was sold on their going and since the Vietnamese Special Forces were themselves supported by the CIA rather than the military-aid program, it was possible to handle. these troops covertly."

Despite these "covert" and "clandestine" campaigns, the study cites some notes from a National Security Council meeting of Nov. 15, 1961: "Pres receiving static from Congress; they against using U.S. troops." At this point, the U.S. troop buildup was announced formally and after the fact.

This is not exactly the picture given by Mr. Riesenberger, is it? The Kennedy decision to build up combat troops in South Vietnam, the Defense Department's own analysts say, was made "without extended study or debate by the administration," or, memory says, "the American people and their representatives in Congress. A final point in this effort to separate rhetoric from fact: Mr. esenberger assures your readers that American support for the war under-President Kennedy was given "because liberty'e survival and success [were] threatened there for millions of South Vietnamese... The grisly hand of totalifarianism was about to enslave them all. The Defense Department analysts note that in National Security Action Memo-randum No. 111, dated Nov. 22, 1961, and titled "First Phase of Vietnam Program," Mr. Kennedy accepted all major policy recom-mendations in a report from Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara—all except one. This called for, in The Times's ment to the goal of saving South Vietnam from Communism." That was to come later, as was the incident of the South Vietnamese town that U.S. artillery destroyed to save it. EDWARD MIKSIS.

Vietnam Coalition

We have heard quite a lot about the talks for ending the Vietnam war. One point which interests me a great deal is the possibility of having a coalition government in Salgon, consisting of Communists, neutrals and pro-Western elements. Out of the bottom of my heart I sincerely hope that the arrangement will work, but I have my doubts.

In dealing with these matters, I only hope that the Victnamese and Americans have studied the Lactian experiment closely. All that is being proposed now was not only proposed concerning Laos but actually agreed to, Many in South Vietnam did exist and still do exist in Laos. The country was divided into three groups: the pro-Western group under Prince Boun Oum, the Pathet Lao under Prince Souphanouvong, and the neutralist group under Prince Souvanna Phouma. Regarding the neutral group, which so many people pin their hopes on, this stood out even more strongly in Laos than it does in Vietnam, Now in Vietnam they are having to create a neutral government so as to obtain success from a coalition government in Saigon. However, in Laos the neutralists were in a far stronger position. They actually had their own army led by Gen. Kong Lee who attempted a coup d'état. Although it was only partially suc-cessful, they retreated from Vientlane with his army still intact. There was Prince Souvanna Phouma, who was far more able to dominate Lactian politics than anyone else. He is still there as prime minister in Labs. How-ever, despite the fact that the ed, but were already there, it.

was not possible for them to keep the government together. Within a short time both the right-wing and the left-wing groups were busy fighting Prince Souvanna

Phouma's group.

I feel that the Americans and Victnamese will have to take a very hard look at the Lactian experiment to make sure that a Vietnamese peace agreement, or so-called peace agreement, does not go the same way. Perhaps the only thing that the Vietnam agreement has over the Laction one is that there has been so moch slaughter and so much

Once again the spending pattern of the U.S. consumer is being carefully scrutinised in economic circles-not that it is too lackadaisical but rather because it may become overly experant.

In the closing weeks of 1972. some high government officials and others are beginning to proclaim a new theme with a bit of awe and some apprehension. The economy, they say, is even stronger than previously trumpeted and is gaining vigor from rising consumer, business and government spending. The danger is that the mixture could be too enriched.

Excessive euphoris on the part of the buying public might impose-severe strains in the months ahead and disrupt the stable and balanced expansion under way the last two years. In its war against inflation, the foremost economic problem, the nation has won a few skirmishes but not the battle.

Retall Sales Rise

Except for some of the Northeastern and Eastern states, the pace of retail sales was being stepped up sharply around the country as the big Christmas shopping season started.

A Peace Rally

The Friday rally, when the Dow added nearly 6 points, was sparked by optimistic reports out of Washington that a Vietnam cease-fire was near.

Bond pricee showed a slightly easter tone. But the big news for the week was American Telephone's $350 million debenture offering. The syndicate led by Morgan Stanley offered the debentures at a price to yield 7.145 percent to maturity.

The famous Australian pair, Dick Cummings and Tim Seres, produced an electrifying bidding segnence. After opening one heart and receiving a one-spade response Seres bid one no trump. But when his partner then jumped to three hearts he made a startling jump to six hearts. In his method Seres knew that his partner held a substantial spade suit, a heart fit and the values for game. The slam bid was an intelligent gamble. Everything hinged on the opening lead. A trump lead would have en foolish, but the spade ace had something to recommend it; If North-South had held eight spades between them East would

The French expert sitting West rejected this idea, rightly as it turned out, and determined to lead a minor suit. He hoped to establish a trick while retaining cootrol of dummy's spade suit. He settled on a club, which turned out to be wrong. South had no trouble in winning in his hand, drawing trumps, and establishing spades. His diamond losers disappeared on spades, and he made the slam with four spade tricks, tive trump tricks and three minor-suit winners. He did not even need a club ruff in the

In the toss up between minor suits West no doubt took account of the fact that a club lead from the queen was rather less likely to give away a trick than a diamood from the king. But once he had steeled himself to make an attacking lead he should have looked at it from another angle.

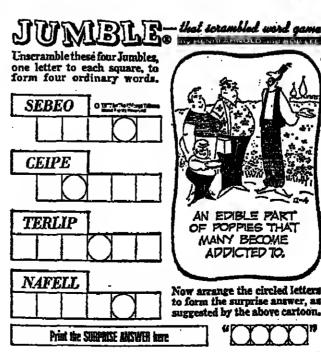

It was clear that East could have very little honor strength. It was therefore somewhat more likely that he held the diamond queen than the club king. This reasoning would have allowed West to find the killing lead of a diamond and beat the slam,

BOOKS.

Critics' Choice

MEMBERS of the staff of The New York Times Book Review have selected from the books reviewed during the last year five they consider of particular importance and excellence,

They are: "The Children of Pride: A True Story of Georgia and the Civil War," edited by Robert Manson Myers. (Yale University Press; $19.95); "Henry James. The Master, 1901-1916" by Leon Edel (J.P. Lippincott Co. si2.95); "Fire in the Lake: The Victnamese and Americans in Victnam" by Frances FitzGerald (Atlantic-Little, Brown, $12.50); "The Coming of Age" by Simons de Beauvoir (G.P. Putnam's Sons, $10; and "A Theory of Justice" by John Rawls (Harvard University Press, $15, cloth; $3.95, paper), All the books, except Mr. Rawle's, have been reviewed on this page.

loving work of scholarship. From 6.000 letters written among several branches of a Southern family between 1854 and 1865. Robert Manson Myers has woven 1,200 of them into a massive and touching portrait of a hygone society. Beginning on a summer after-noon with a nother's description of her peaceful pursuits, followed by a reply from her son, a stadent in Boston, describing abolitionist riots, we are caught up in the slowly unfolding tragedy of the Civil War. Never before have we been made quite so aware of the public and private life of town and plantation, of the religious and political beliefs, the joys, sorrows, loves, recreations, education, linesses and deaths of people in that time and place. Mr. Myers has added hundreds of pages of biographical and historical information that make the volume a matchless record of the rise and fall of 19th-century Southern civilization.

With the publication of "The Master," the fifth and final volume of his biography of Henry James, Leon Edel brings to a close a literary labor of 20 years. The only works that invite comparison with Edel's achievement —the only ones which trace the lives of major modern writers with a complete scholarly fidelity and yet emerge as works of literary distinction in their own right _are George D. Painter's "Proust" and Richard Elimann's "James Joyce." Henry James moved in the large world, and he created a large world of his own: he was a great novelist and great critic. Mr. Edel's achievement is to have written, with literary, historical and psychological perspicacity, a life worthy of one of the few American writers who can be called a master.

Frances FitzGerald's "Pire in the Lake" is the richest kind of contemporary history; it places political and military events in cultural perspective-something rarely done in the hundreds of books written about Vietnam during the last dozen years. In analyzing the stabilities and instabilities of Vietnamese society. Fitz-Gerald shows how the country is undergoing, not a civil war, but a revolution, a term she carefully defines in its Victnamese context. She tells how the Vietnamese have adapted communism hoth to their Confucian beritage and the imperatives of modernization and how they have been able to organize so effectively against all military odds. She describes the serial frustrations of the French and Americans Victnam and explains the tree! vance of "pacification," She superb at charifying the diffe ences between Vietnamese ar American cultures. Her choice significant anecdotal detail enrich her generalizations is ma terly. She combines wise readu with vivid and compassiona reportage. This is the best bor on Vietnam so far; it is sad overdue by at least five years.

In "The Coming of Ag Simone de Beauvoir confronts subject of universal private a guish and universal nublic silene From her prodigious reading world literature and her person observation she has singl handedly established a historiof and a rhetoric for the prociof aging. She draws skillfully are easily on both scientific at artistic evidence, on ethnologi psychology and physiology, t medicine and sociology, on pain ing, poetry and fiction. The box is a catologue rossonné of ti causes and effects of aging: be as well as being encyclopedic has a passionate theme: (! steady degradation of old uge a time when there are more ar more eiderly people. Beauvo reports movingly on the predict ment of the aged in the moder world whether as the result t poverty, illness or enforced id-ness, within the family, at worl in institutions and in society i. large. Her analyses and reporting are complemented to great eller by her vignettes of famous histo. ical flaures in old age. Althoug The Coming of Age. is a synthe sis of available knowledge, Bont voir has shaped the material int. a pioneering work. More than 20 years in the mak

ing. John Rawis's "A. Theory o

Justice" is a mugisterial exercis

io "moral geometry," as demand ing as it is rewarding. Although it was published in 1971, it wa not widely reviewed until 1972 because critics needed time to get a grip on its complexities. It fact, it may not be properly understood until it has been studied for years—as it certainly will be, in political science and philosophy courses. Rawls's achievement has been to restate revise and breathe new life inte the idea of the social contract as a basis for political structures: The social contract gave way in the 19th century to the utilizarian concept of "the greatest good for the greatest number." But Rawle demonstrates that utilitarianism tions about justice and fairness. (as embodied, for instance, in the U.S. Constitution). At home with contemporary philosophical tech." niques and concerns, such as 'b' decision and game theory. Rawls ' turns the problem of justice into a problem in rational choice. His a notion of "justice as fairness" and consists not only of the right of a each person to the most exten . ... sive liberty compatible with a ..... like liberty for others; it also 1insists that social and economic . . . inequalities are tolerable only when they are to ereryone's advantage, not just to the advantage of a majority. The talented or socially advantaged person hasn't carned anything: -... Those who have been favored by nature, whoever they are," he writes. may galn from their good fortune only on terms that improve the situation of those who have lost out." Rawls's arguments for this proposition are persuasive; Its political implications may change our lives. The New York Times

In the other blockbuster, the Reds acquired Nelson, a 28-year-old pitcher with the fifth best earned-rim average in the American League (2.08), and Schein-blum, an outfielder who finished with the sixth best batting averege (200)

To get them, Cincinnati traded McRae, an outfielder used chiefly as a pinch-hitter, and Simpson. who won 13 of 14 games as a rookie pitcher two years before injuring his shoulder,

"Right now I'm looking at Scheinhlum as the extra guy." said manager Sparky Anderson of the Reds, looking like a man halding a full house. "I know he hit 300, but I've got Bob Tolan, Pete Rose and Cesar Gero-nimo in our ontfield. MoRae can

The Reds also bought Larry Stahl from San Diego to give their outfield even more depth, and dealt laft-handed pitcher Jim Merritt to the Texas Rangers for catcher Hal King and infielder Jim Driscoll. with the Reds this season.

Driscoll batted 245 at Denver and King hit 180 for the Rangers. In a trade that raised eyebrows. Oakland lowered the boom on Epstein, who hit 26 home runs during the season but then went 0-for-16 in the World Series and argued with manager Dick Williams hesides. His complaint was "play me or trada me," and the A's obliged. The mustachloed first-baseman went to Texas for Horacio Pina, a relief pitcher, while Brant Alyes also was sent to the Rangers to complete an earlier exchange. In other deals as the convention ended Friday:

• The Mets traded Marshall to the Padres for Severinsen, a right-handed relief pitcher, and then assigned him to their Tidewater farm team. Marshall, 29, became a Met in 1970 after three seasons with the San Francisco Giants. As a platoon outfielder, he contributed two grand-slam home runs and also pinch-hit three home runs, but never became a regular.

• The Philadelphia Phillies got Cesar Tovar, a jack-of-all-trades player from the Minnesota Twins for three players: Ken Sanders, a workhorse relief pitcher; Ken Reynolds, a left-banded pitcher, and Joe Lis, who plays both first base and the outfield. Tovar, 32, and with Minnesota eight years, hit 265 this year, Sanders, 31, saved 61 games in three years with the Milwaukee Brewers, who traded him to the Phillies this

Baker believe me, you can learn to live with it. The trick is not to look at the bills too often and eat pienty of aspirin.

One of the biggest problems here is the Air Force. It has an annoying habit of calling up when you are in the middle of dinner and asking for more money. Whatever you do, don't let the Air Force have any more money until you go to the office next morning.

If you do. I'll tell you what's going to happen. Just about the time you have settled into a deep sleep, the phone is going to ring. It will be the Navy.

"Give me some more money right away," the Navy will say. And you'll say, "Nonsense! No branch of the military needs more mooey at this time of night."

And the Navy will say, 'If you don't get the money over here right away, there is going to be n bad leak, and Congress is going to find out that the Air Force got more money at dinner time but the Navy couldn't have any."

If it comes to this, the best thing is to give the Navy more money right away. All you do is call up the Treasury and tell the girl at the switchboard that you are the secretary of defense and want to know how to get some more money to the Navy right away, and she will take care of

While you are at it, you might just as well have her get the Army some more money too, or you are going to be waked up ngain at 4 a.m., and you don't want that to happen because there will be a real beadache waiting when you get down to the Pentagon next morning.

Sitting right there in your office will be the Air Force, madder than a wet hen. What the Air Force wants to know is why you gave the Navy and the Army dur-

LIKE any thoughful tenant ing the night the same amount of more money you gave the Air

> It will point out that the high price of Air Force hardware means the Air Force naturally needs more money than the Navy and the Army. The best thing, Elliot, is to give the Air Force more money right there on the spot, and tell your secretary that if the Army and Navy call she is to advise them that you have taken a truck over to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving for a load of new money and can't be reached for the rest of the month.

For a really pleasant escape, drop in on the Marine Corps sometime. It takes so little money to make the Marine Corps happy that it's cheaper than a week m Miami Beach. It does your heart good to see all the hair that's still being cut down there, too. The Marine Corps, I mean; not Miami Beach. If the price of barbering ever goes up, the Marine Corps will need more money than the Air Force.

I'm sorry if this note sounds like one long whine about more money, Elliot, because there's more to the Pentagoo than that. There are moments of high adventure that will remind you of boybood vacation nights on Cape

For example, the Air Force sometimes follows my car until I stop for B light and then jumps in with me and demands more money right away. Just tha other night I gave the Air Force the scare of its life when it jumped into the car, cried "Give me more money at once or America is doomed!" and found itself face to face with President Nixon.

It wasn't actually the President, naturally. It was just me wearing a President Nixon rub-ber fright mask, but the Air Force didn't wait to investigate. In fact, it didn't telephone me at home demanding more money for the next two nights.

So, you see, Elliot, there's a lot of good harmless fun to be had here in addition to the solid patriotic pleasure that comes from knowing you are doing a big job for humanity. Best of luck, WEL.

P.S. If one of the services backs you into a corner sometime demanding more money before it will leave the office. I always keep a billion or two hidden under the false bottom in the trash can.

Richard Dattner's playground near Metropolitan Museum of Art.

The New Playground Establishment

By Lisa Hammel New YORK (NYT).—In the past six years, the New Left playground designers has practically become Establishment. Championed by parents. encouraged by a few far-seeing city officials, and underwritten foundations, tha designers have created concrete mounds and soaring wooden structures that are steadily replacing or augmenting the old swing-andseesaw playgrounds.

Ten years from now, those asphalt squares locked inside chain-link fences may seem as quaint as a front porch glider. Two men in New York, an architect and a landscape architect, are primarily responsible for this revolution in playground design: Richard Dattner and M. Paul Friedberg. Between them, they have built the lion's share of new playgrounds in the city, from budget-priced vest-pocket parks to Both, working out of their separate organizations (they consider themselves "friendly competitors," Mr. Dattner said), evolved the idea of a total play environment in which almost all of the elements were interrelated and, thus, enhanced opulent acres of play area.

the play possibilities. Richard Dattner's newest playground opened Thursday. Replacing a former arid triangle of asphalt just north of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, it is a small monument of new design-complete with stylized tree houses, a rope bridge, brick pyramids enclosing sleek silvery slides, water channels and wading amphitheater, cables and pulleys for the more daring to swing themselves on (across the breadth of the playground), and quieter seating areas, shaded by trees, for the Upper East Side neighborhood. Like his first playground, at 67th Street and Central Park West, this one has been underwritten by the Estée and Joseph Lauder Foundation (which now has another one going up on the Upper West Side). The playground cost $250,000, about $50,000 of which was raised by R well-organized and highly determined group of mothers who formed themselves into the 85th Street Playground Associa-mothers and the elderly of the

Actively drawn into the planning and design at all stages, spokesmen for the mothers profess themselves delighted at the results. Their children seemed even more delighted—hurtling happily upon every structure within reach.

Mr. Dattner, too, is pleased a little blt of education," he with his design, which has not said. been changed too much in concept from the first "adventure playground" he did for the Lauder Foundation "I think my original ideas bave all been corroborated," ha said recently of the five years of child-testing his first playground has undergone. But he does not think it is an ideal playground. "The function of a city playground," he said, "is to recreate the environment that children find naturally in the country."

'I think the ideal playground would be quite a bit more malleable than this one is, particularly in giving kids chance to actually build the environment," he said. "An ideal playground would be a cross between this one and the European adventure playground, where the environment is continuously created by the children. And the ideal playground would have to have play leaders."

But Mr. Dattner doesn't think this possible now in New York. because, he says, you've got to have equipment that is comparatively vandal-proof, and besides, parents aren't ready for the European adventure play-

Nor, except in the 67th Street playground, have parents been particularly impressed with the necessity of a play leader to stimulate and guide the chil-

Paul Friedberg would agree with most of what Mr. Dattner says, but Mr. Friedberg regards the new playgrounds as only a jumping-off point for future development.

"Recreation does not occur only where the design is," Mr. Friedberg said recently. "I think you have to find out where the people are first and then create a resource that gives them options."

For example, he said, in a small but much lauded playground he did a few years ago on West 89th Street, "there was more activity in the playground while it was being built than after the playground was completed." This, he thinks, is because the building materials themselves were exciting for the children to manipulate, and also because once the novelty wears off, children tend not to go as much to a place that is not "their territory."

He says that playground designing should start with tha ground here. "It's going to take street on which children live.

Stricken with tuberculosis at the age of 16, Bragg was sent to Switzerland and placed under the care of Dr. August Rollier. The prescription for recovery was natural foods, exercise and clean air and sunshine. Bragg says ha has followed that prescription throughout his life and still travels around the world lecturing on his "simple system of living." "If people would change their mode eating, we could close two thirds of the hospitals and reduce our medical force to one third of what we have now," he said. He recommends a diet of fresh fruits and vegetables nuts and seeds, fish, little meat and

IN THE BABYSFITING FIELD

Excerpt from a letter received from on advertise who took advantage of our special offer for "A consecutive insertions for the price of 3" . .

"In the beginning of October I placed an ad in you paper for bubysitting. I managed to squeeze oil the rile erant information into 2 lines, so, with the discount given, I decided to run my ad 4 times. Doing so was a extremely well rewarded decision: I received no answer at all until the third day. Then, I was swamped will calls! I received three ealls for teaching English is addition to all the calls for babysitting. If I wanted it I could be babysitting every night!

"I had previously tried other ways of petting babysitting jobs—putting up notes on bulletin boards, etc. But, I have to admit that I never had it so good before."
